HOW IT ALL BEGAN

A STORY OF SUSTAINABILITY

I have always been passionate about adding value to agro-products both for local production and for export. My passion for cocoa began to grow when I saw the vast potential cocoa farms have to support the lives of local farmers for generations if sustainably farmed whilst providing a valuable and delicious product for the world to enjoy. This fueled my desire to not only export processed cocoa but to connect with local farmers and establish a high quality supply chain from the farmer to the consumer.

When you buy from Frontier Logistics International, you buy cocoa that has been ethically sourced, grown, harvested, and processed. Having gone through tight quality control measures to ensure that only high quality beans are packaged for your purchase.

SECURING A HERITAGE

EMPOWERING COCOA FARMERS FOR GENERATIONS

In an industry that faces sustainability challenges, we are determined and equipped to empower smallholder farmers to secure the future of their farms; We buy cocoa directly from farmer groups in all major cocoa growing regions of Uganda we train and mentor farmers groups in healthy agricultural practices that ensure high yields and healthy cocoa farms that can bring profits for generations. Farms where the environment and trees are protected, where farmers earn an equitable wage, can educate their families and improve lives in their usually low-income households. 10% of the profit we make selling processed cocoa beans goes back to the small holder farmers. Some of that is reinvested directly into the farms through savings schemes. We provide farmers quality cocoa seedlings and fruit to expand their produce and maximize capacity of their land by growing more.

A WALK THROUGH A COCOA FARM

EVERY BAG OF COCOA YOU BUY HAS A STORY

As you visit and walk through the cocoa gardens down in Kayunga, you won't find yourself alone. You won't go far before the proud Mr. Henry Lwanga starts to talk you through the history and the life of his cocoa farm. Through his boyhood when his grandfather run and worked the land and cocoa was just a part of a boy's daily adventure to how it grew into a passion that is now his livelihood as a man. As you listen to his life story, so beautifully interwoven with the taste and flavor of the roasted cocoa beans he offers you, you realize – this farm is his life and his pride.

The rustle of dry leaves beneath his sandal-clad feet as you walk through the rich, damp peat of his precious gardens makes you fall in love with the story.

'For a farm to yield it's best,' he says, 'the farmer must be its friend.' - visit the farm daily, almost ceremoniously - as if to speak to his trees a word of encouragement and love. It's not the high season so there is no full harvest to see. But you pick up on his enthusiasm and the abundance of fruit on the trees is unmistakable - This will be a good year! He tells me the gardens are missing the usual bustle of strong young men and women eagerly cutting ripe fruit down from the trees and gathering around ceremoniously to harvest the beans from the pods. This is an event no one wants to miss. It's a time to sing songs, work hard, celebrate a season and the dream of what lies ahead.
